OUR $1,500,000 CAMPAIGN IS ANNOUNCED

To the alumnae scattered to the four winds, yet as keenly interested in the activities of the College as are we here at home, we wish to pass on the happenings of the dinner and meeting held on Friday, November 12th, at the College, when the first public announcement of our $1,500,000 campaign for expansion was made. The facts we can tell you. The difficult thing to convey is the spirit of enthusiasm, of optimism, and of conviction that animated all those who spoke at the meeting, and, on the part of those who listened, the reflected spirit of desire to work, to push this project to its successful conclusion and to go out and tell everyone of the splendid record of the College.

There were one hundred and sixty present—a big family of guarantors, corporators, faculty, students, alumnae representatives from several distant cities, and old-time friends of our pioneer institution. We all gathered in the gymnasium and had an informal, buffet supper—then adjourned to the West Lecture Room for speaking and discussion, which was opened by Dean Tracy, who said:

"There is just one reason why we are here tonight, and that is, because we believe in the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania. Because of her traditions and her honest work, our vision of her future is so clear that it has been possible for the architect to translate it into pictures"—and she pointed to the architect's sketches of the main buildings which will eventually form the Greater Woman's Medical College. "It is for you and me to follow Mrs. Starr's lead and make these pictures realities."

Mrs. Starr declared that she had made an intensive study for four years of the needs of the College, and of its worth, and nothing could convince her that it is not entitled to its place in the sun.
To gain this place, she pointed out that a change of location is imperative since there is no room for expansion in the present location and that even if there were room, the change that has taken place in the neighborhood of the College made a change desirable. She said that the new site, secured through the efforts of Mr. Sheppard, has unequalled advantages, and that already offers for more than the purchase price had been received.

"Just one thing is needed to put over this campaign, and that is one hundred per cent. action and one hundred per cent. confidence on the part of everyone who belongs to and is interested in this institution," declared Mrs. Starr. "It is impossible to sell a thing to others until we believe in it ourselves. We are splendidly equipped in everything except buildings. Those we must get, and if we all consider ourselves a committee of the whole—not to be disbanded until our task is finished—it can be accomplished."

Mrs. Starr then introduced Mr. John Crosby Brown, representing Tamblyn & Brown, the firm in whose hands the guarantors have felt it wise to place the direction of the campaign, who gave a very interesting account of modern methods of raising money, and outlined, logically and conclusively, the general plan which would be followed in this particular effort.

Mr. Brown expressed his absolute confidence in the successful outcome of this campaign—a confidence based upon the history and ideals of the College itself—but stated that hard work on the part of everyone interested in our institution, and particularly on the part of the alumnae, would be a necessary factor in the success. He pointed out that the campaign would have to be a slow, educational one and that this education would have to be carried on chiefly by the alumnae themselves. He said that there are two main avenues of approach—first that of the printed word, whether through newspaper, magazine or pamphlet; second, the avenue of the personal interview, in which the case for the College is presented directly. He felt the College merited, and would receive, a great deal of attention from the public press in the course of the campaign.

"The alumnae can do more to bring this institution before the public and to get the attention of men and women prominent in their various communities than can anyone else," declared Mr. Brown. "Any institution is judged by the product it turns out. Not only in Philadelphia, but in other large cities this campaign for publicity must be waged.
Do not overlook a chance to get items concerning the College or its alumnae into your own papers, to talk to people about your institution, to enlist the interest and support of the prominent people of your community—for it is by this slow and gradual permeation of the public mind that a cause is won. In this day of world news pouring into our papers, it is not easy to claim public attention long enough to have any effect upon public opinion. But we have more than a year before we make our actual appeal to the general public. In that time, all of us working together can do much to win and hold consideration and support for this institution."

Dr. Margaret Butler, who, as chairman of the National Alumnae Campaign Committee, had invited to this meeting representatives from various sections of the country to take part in the discussion of organizing alumnae activities everywhere, said that the campaign work was proving one of the most interesting things she had ever done and she did not anticipate great difficulties.

"Already I spend much of my time spotting millionaires all over the country and trying to figure out how and through whom to reach their vulnerable spots, and it is very amusing," declared Dr. Butler.

She pointed out that alumnae are scattered from Alaska to the Argentine—from one pole to another, and in all this great western hemisphere there is only one college where women may study medicine by themselves, while there are eight medical schools where men have that privilege.

Dr. Butler introduced the representatives from other cities who had interrupted their busy lives to come to Philadelphia to attend this meeting, and their responses were enormously cheering and warming.

Dr. Inez Philbrick from Lincoln, Nebraska, introduced as having a tremendous practice and having brought almost two thousand babies into the world, and now a lecturer at the University of Nebraska, said that she had never lost her affection nor gratitude for the Woman's Medical College and would do all in her power to forward this campaign—even though, as she reminded her listeners, millionaires are few and far between in Nebraska, and only two graduates of the College reside in the state.

Dr. Adele Streeseman, who came from New York, said that her first reaction when she heard of the campaign was to say that it took all one's time to be a good doctor and that she was too busy to do outside work. Since hearing the speakers, she said she had undergone an entire change of heart and point of view and felt that the alumnae owed the College which had given them their fine training appreciation and support in more ways than in just doing their own jobs well.

"The work of this institution will go on and is of vastly more importance than the work of any one of us," declared Dr. Streeseeman, "and we owe it to the future College to work for it at this crucial time, even if it means some neglect of our own work. The Alumnae Association can do a great work and should function."

Dr. Ellen Potter from Harrisburg, who followed, said that she agreed with Dr. Streeseeman. Luke-warm people would be of no value in this campaign, and far from being luke-warm herself, she was red hot! She said that she had nursed the College Hospital through its first year, as the first resident doctor and knew its real vitality. She felt unutterably grateful for the training given her by the Woman's Medical College and would do anything she could to repay that debt. She felt that the College had outgrown its limitations and that the new site offered infinite opportunities for future development.

Dr. Rachelle Yarros, from Chicago, recently appointed Professor of Social Hygiene in the medical school of the University of Illinois, said that she had had many years in which to think about it, and she had never for one moment regretted studying at the Woman's Medical College and, in fact, felt she had been better trained in many ways than are most men physicians.

She spoke of the training, enthusiasm and idealism of the Woman's Medical College and referred to the teaching of Dr. Broomall, who taught students to face everything with courage through her own sincerity, her idealism and her intelligence.

"I am interested now that you are talking about millions," declared Dr. Yarros, "if it had been hundreds, I shouldn't have had time to notice. I should like to see this school contribute something plus—something peculiar to our sex, something which women can do best. I am enormously interested in Dean Tracy's idea of a department to teach people how to live—it is a marvelous dream and one which only needs faith to make it possible. I like the idea of educating people first before asking them for money—it is like our school to go slowly and build surely. I shall do all in my power to help."

Mrs. Lucretia Blankenburg, daughter of Dr. Hannah Longshore, graduate of the first class of the Woman's Medical College and the pioneer woman physician to "hang out her sign" in Philadelphia, was an interested guest. When asked to say a few words, she declared that she had spent the evening mentally reminiscing about the time when her mother was getting established in medical practice, and she was a small child.

"Those were days when it wasn't quite decent for a woman to be a doctor," said Mrs. Blankenburg, "and the child of such a woman wasn't considered fit to play with other children. Such times have passed, but the College has always continued to maintain its up-to-date point of view."

A telegram from Dr. Helen Upham, President of the Graduate Council, and several letters from alumnae in far-off India and China were referred to by Dr. Butler as expressing enthusiasm and gratitude that the College is to take this significant forward step.

Before the meeting adjourned, cards, such as all of you received in a letter last week, were given out so that everyone might check the type of service she felt herself best fitted to perform, and list names of friends whose interest in the Woman's Medical College might be cultivated.

Alumnae representatives who came to Philadelphia to attend this meeting included Dr. Rachelle S. Yarros of Chicago, Dr. Ellen C. Potter of Harrisburg, Dr. Inez C. Philbrick of Lincoln, Nebraska, Dr. Adele E. Streeseman of New York City, Dr. Myrtle Moore-Canavan of Boston, and Dr. Sara M. J. Ching of Changsha, China, temporarily a resident of California.

NATIONAL PLANS OF CAMPAIGN ARE DISCUSSED

On Saturday morning, November 13, the National Committee in charge of the alumnae campaign and the out-of-town representatives met to discuss organization plans for the entire country, and to suggest ways and means by which busy physicians might find time to forward this great project. Mrs. Starr and Mr. Sheppard met with this group.

After considerable discussion, in which the desire of those present to do everything possible to win public esteem and support for the college was evident, a resolution was passed which recommended the adoption of a definite goal for the alumnae to work toward—one which could be attained by all working together without undue burden on any individual, and yet would crystallize alumnae strength and unanimity in maintaining and increasing the usefulness of this unique institution.

The construction of the main college building was unanimously chosen as the goal which would mean more than any other to graduates of all the classes. The fact that it is planned to erect this building first, that it is of primary importance to the continuance and growth of the college, and that it will most completely embody the progressive spirit of the alumnae, were the reasons which prompted the selection of this goal.

This building will be equipped to care for 200 students—double the present capacity. It will be built according to the latest scientific planning for correlating lecture, laboratory and clinical facilities, and will be connected with the hospital by a corridor. Architectural sketches picture it as a long, low, Colonial building, its only ornamentation the Colonial portico with high columns—a building in keeping with the solidarity and genuine simplicity of the college itself.

After the meeting, automobiles were provided to take the visiting alumnae to the new site, the advantageous location of which with reference to clinical material, as well as its commanding situation on the crest of a hill where light, air and view cannot be obstructed, increased enormously the enthusiasm of all those who could go out, and confirmed for them the wise judgment and vision of the Corporation in securing this acreage.

NEWS ITEMS

While keeping an engagement to address a meeting of the Association of American Medical Colleges in Cleveland on October 25th, on "What Becomes of the Woman Graduate," Dr. Tracy talked before a group of women physicians in Cleveland, several of whom are alumnae of this College, about the growing demand for women physicians and the effort the College is making to meet this need.

She also spoke before the Business and Professional Woman's Club in Sharon, Pa., and found the members of that organization interested in the College plans, particularly in those of the proposed health clinic and preventive medicine department, a field in which Dr. Tracy is a recognized authority.
The Woman's Medical Society of Pittsburgh has asked Dr. Tracy to meet with that group in the near future.

Miss Esse V. Hathaway, executive secretary of the Woman's Foundation for Health, Inc., of 370 Seventh Avenue, New York City, and Dr. Lenna L. Meanes, Medical Director of the same foundation, of which Dr. Martha Tracy is president, were interested guests of the college at the dinner and meeting on Friday night.

STUDENT AFFAIRS

Opening Reception to New Students. The Un-usual party given to new students by the Young Women's Christian Association and the Students' Association was held the first Saturday evening of the new school session, October 2d. Greetings from the Presidents of both associations and from Dean Tracy were given.

Our new girls were there almost 100 per cent. When their names were called they answered with the names of their colleges, towns, and states, the last ranging from Massachusetts to California, from Texas to Connecticut, as well as including Korea and China. We were delighted to have some of our Faculty members with us and to have the new students meet them.

The Sophomore Halloween Party was well attended and everyone had a good time. Many were disappointed that the usual array of costumes was wanting and promised to revive the old custom next year. The honors of the evening were carried away by Dr. Sands, garbed as "the Saturday Night Bath," and by Miss Helen Fraser and her partner for the best dancing.

A New Enterprise this year is the Clinical Conference for first and second-year students, held every Saturday morning. Cases are discussed from the point of view of the anatomical and physiological disturbances already understandable by the younger classes. The conferences have proven so interesting that Juniors and Seniors come whenever they can.

The Christmas Bazaar of the Young Women's Christian Association will be held the evening of December 4th in the College Gymnasium. Dinner will be served from six to seven o'clock. Booths, where needle-work, novelties, candy, cake and jellies will be sold, will be open from five-thirty to eleven-thirty. There will also be dancing from eight-thirty on. Contributions will be gladly received.

Brinton Hall is enjoying an unusual year. The Membership Committee reports 92 per cent. of the student body as members of the Young Women's Christian Association.

ALUMNAE NOTES

The Graduate Council Meets

The Graduate Council of the College held its regular semi-annual meeting and election of officers on November 15th at 250 South 21st Street, and unanimously endorsed the action of the Alumnae Campaign Committee in setting as the goal of all the graduates the erection of the main college building.

"This is a goal which must appeal to anyone who has ever studied at the present college and realizes the handicaps under which we have all worked," declared Dr. Mary Buchanan. "To have a modern, well-equipped college building as our contribution to the education of future women physicians is an objective worth working for."

The officers of the previous year were reinstated: Dr. Helen Upham, of Asbury Park, president; Dr. Margaret C. Sturgis, vice-president; Dr. Jean Crump, secretary, and Dr. Ethel Russell, treasurer.

Dr. Tracy has been able to meet with several groups of alumnae to tell them of the plans for expansion on the part of the College, and expects to be able to meet with many more such groups within the next six months.

To bring Dr. Tracy in touch with as many alumnae as possible, as well as with interested organizations, so she may tell them directly of campaign plans, a number of trips are being scheduled for her later in the year. If anyone wishes to secure Dr. Tracy for a definite occasion, please write in to her at campaign headquarters, 311 South Juniper Street, Philadelphia, to see if arrangements can be made to include this in her itinerary.

Dr. Ora Kress Mason, '11, is a Congressional candidate from Kentucky on the Republican ticket, and bids fair to give this Democratic stronghold a good fight, according to recent reports. She and her husband, Dr. William H. Mason, have been actively engaged in the practice of medicine for the last five years in Murray, Kentucky, at the William Mason Memorial Hospital, which they own and operate.

Dr. Miriam Bell, '22, who is now with the Hackett Medical College in Canton, China, writes that she is sending in some lovely pieces of carved ivory, which may be sold for the benefit of the building and endowment fund. This is an excellent way for alumnae in the foreign field to contribute, since the articles sold in this country may bring considerably more than the original investment in the land in which they were purchased.

Dr. Sarah May-Stowell, '92, of Marlboro, New Hampshire, and Dr. Lucinda S. Lovell, '00, of Cavendish, Vermont, recently visited Philadelphia, and called on the College and at our booth in the Palace of Education. Dr. Lovell commented interestingly on having found Dr. Anna E. Broomall at the booth, where she has been an almost constant attendant since its opening. The booth has drawn favorable comment from many alumnae.

Dr. Lillian Howard South, '04, of Louisville, Kentucky, has been chosen by her state as one of the four women in Kentucky who have done most for mankind in the last fifty years.

Dr. Isabella M. Clinton, '22, visited the College on her way to the International Tuberculosis Conference in Washington, held September 30th. Dr. Clinton is Assistant in Medicine at Stanford University, Assistant Visiting Physician at the San Francisco Hospital, and on the staff of the Tuberculosis Sanitarium.

Dr. Elizabeth M. Moyer-Swab, '15, recently visited the College. She is specializing in ophthalmological work in Omaha, Nebraska.

A cable from Shanghai announces the safe arrival of Dr. Lula M. Disosway, '25, on the President Jackson. Best wishes to Dr. Disosway and may we have a letter soon.

A letter from Dr. Arline M. Beal, '24, from Canton Lodge, Katagiri, South India, dated May 24, brings the news that Dr. Beal was then in the hills studying Telugu and intended returning to the plains in August.

"India is like Fairyland and I doubt if the charm ever wears off," writes Dr. Beal, but she adds that there are conditions and experiences that tear at one's heart.
Dr. Beal sends greetings to her friends at the College and gives her permanent address as: A. E. L. M. Hospital at Guntur, South India.

Dr. Mary W. Griscom, ’91, gave a vivid and interesting travel talk at the Germantown Women’s Club last month. Her ten years in China, Korea, Persia and India were filled with thrilling experiences and unusual opportunities for service.

WORLD NEWS

Hungary Bars Women Doctors

BUDAPEST, July 30 (A. P.)—New women entrants into the medical profession in Hungary are barred until further notice under a decree issued by the Minister of Public Instructions on the ground that doctors are becoming too numerous. The authorities ordered that women students shall not be enrolled henceforth by the medical faculties of Hungarian universities.
