A WORD TO PUBLIC SPIRITED WOMEN

about The Anna Howard Shaw Memorial in the DEPARTMENT OF PREVENTIVE MEDICINE at the WOMAN'S MEDICAL COLLEGE of PENNSYLVANIA

If Dr. Anna Howard Shaw were alive today she would be giving the last years of her life to the sort of human service for which the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania has organized its Department of Preventive Medicine.
Dr. Shaw preached temperance. National prohibition is realized.

She sought the vote as a remedy for intolerable social and political confusion. Women are enfranchised in the United States today.
Dr. Shaw believed that medicine should be a science of prevention
This ideal is not yet realized.
The Anna Howard Shaw Memorial

in the Department of Preventive Medicine of the Woman's Medical College is being established to take up the work of this beloved pioneer where she was forced to lay it down.

In the name of American womanhood it will complete a cycle of achievement as noble as any to which a human life has been dedicated.

is also a pioneer. It was the first medical school for women in the world. It is still the only medical institution exclusively for women in the United States. It is the one institution fitted and ready to realize and express the purpose symbolized by Dr. Shaw's life.

Funds are needed to establish this Memorial. The College depends on the women of the country to see to it that a memorial so fitting, a work so important, and an idea which will be the basic one in future medical development is not endangered by lack of means.

In the name of the most devoted pioneer in the woman's movement, we ask the support of all women for this project.

Preventive Medicine

is exactly what the term implies. Its aim is to frustrate disease. It will develop a plan for health education of young women (the potential mothers of the race) whereby physical defects and preventable diseases may be corrected and checked before the slow, uncertain work of cure becomes necessary.

The theory of Preventive Medicine as it will be taught in this Department, will prepare women physicians, health officers and social health workers for service throughout the United States. They will lead the way to cooperation between physicians, schools, colleges, industrial and commercial organizations, health authorities and social agencies, in an effort to coordinate the forces working to make good health the personal possession of all the people of the United States.

*         *         *         *

The above statement was presented to the delegates at the annual convention of the National Woman Suffrage Association in Chicago.

The spirit of Dr. Shaw's great personality was that of service. Her aim, whether in her work for temperance or for suffrage, was with but one end in view—the safeguarding of the home.

The memorial created in the Department of Preventive Medicine perpetuates that great spirit of service and projects it forward into the years that are to come through its ministry to women and little children.
THE CAMPAIGN

The need for extension of facilities at the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania led early in 1919 to the organization of a committee, with Dr. Gertrude A. Walker as chairman, which met to consider plans for the conduct of an intensive drive for funds.

The preliminary work was well underway when circumstances developed that resulted in a postponement of the effort until October. In October again Providence intervened. Nine campaigns were staged to take place in Philadelphia during that month, and once more, in face of possible criticism, the good business judgment of the Campaign Committee prevailed and postponement until January, 1920, was agreed upon.

In August Dr. Ellen C. Potter had consented to serve as acting chairman in charge of preliminary plans during Dr. Walker's absence from the city. Dr. Walker once more assumed the direction of events in October, but with the final postponement of the drive until January she was obliged to withdraw permanently because of plans already made to sail for China early in December.

In January, therefore, the repressed energies of the preceding nine months burst forth into activity, and under the leadership of Dr. Potter, assisted by Mrs. James Starr, Jr., as associate chairman, the campaign organization "opened fire."

The enthusiasm with which the teams worked and the interest which has been sustained since January 8, when the intensive work was launched, mark the drive as one of the most important efforts of the kind in the history of the College. Important contacts have been established with churches, the women's clubs, and other organized groups who recognize the fundamental relation of the woman physician to the welfare of the community.

Dr. C. Lincoln Furbush, Director of Public Health of Philadelphia, on taking office in January outlined a program based largely on Preventive Medicine; and he gave the strongest possible endorsement to our Campaign.

The preliminary organization, which had been developing during several months, was directed from temporary headquarters established at the National League for Woman's Service, 1703 Walnut Street.

One of the first moves by the Campaign Committee was the calling of a luncheon at the City Club for the discussion of campaign methods. Those who attended were the Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins, Mrs. Joseph M. Gazzam, Miss Clara Middleton, Mrs. Imogene B. Oakley, Mrs. Maurice B. Saul, Mrs. Edward Shields, Mrs. William B. Derr, Mrs. H. O. Peebles, Mrs. E. A. Schnabel, Dr. Alice Weld Tallant, Dr. Marie L.
Bauer, Dr. Annie B. Hall, Dr. Frances C. Van Gasken, Dr. Ellen C. Potter, Dr. Martha Tracy, Walter Sheppard, James Starr, Jr., Dr. Wilmer Krusen and Dr. George M. Piersol. Many interesting suggestions were advanced to make the campaign unique, and several of the ideas were worked out later on practical and profitable lines.

There were many reasons why ours proved to be a "different" campaign, even in a day when the public is well-nigh "driven" mad. It was "home-made." There was in the final execution of our effort no professional campaign director. The office management was conducted entirely by volunteers.

Dr. Potter, as chairman, and her associate, Mrs. Starr, made their appeal to the public on the sheer merits of the cause and the great service which the College has rendered in many fields.

An active Executive Committee of fifteen women and a volunteer organization, approximately two hundred team members, worked for a fortnight, interpreting the aims of the College, recalling its traditions and presenting its possibilities to a public that listened sympathetically and gave generously. A full list of the personnel of this organization will be found on a later page.

There was a splendid spirit of coöperation. The workers felt that as women they were challenged by an undertaking upon which a woman's pioneer institution depended.

"Women for Women" might have been the Campaign slogan. The College, as the oldest institution in the world for medical education of women, and the only one exclusively for women now existing in the United States, presented itself immediately as a rallying point for the modern group that is interested in public health education as the next great phase of reconstruction.

In rounding out its seventieth year the College set before the thinking people of the community its great task in the preparation of women for the fields both of curative and of preventive medicine. Its only handicap was shown to be the financial one. Tuition fees and a small endowment were not sufficient to withstand the increased economic pressure of post-war days. There was no provision for the necessary expansion. A fifty thousand dollar deficit was imminent. Debts due to the increased scale of living were piled up by the intensive wartime service.

Among many imperative needs these essentials presented themselves:

- There must be erected a residence hall for nurses and students.
- Funds must be established for additional scholarships.
- Increased space and facilities must be provided for the general laboratories of the College.
Additional wards are needed at the College Hospital; and other improvements are imperative both in the main building on North College Avenue and at Barton Dispensary, 335 Washington Avenue.

Stress was laid on the obvious fact, in connection with this program, that the needs of the College are also the needs of the public, and hundreds of contributors knew from personal experience that the College and its Hospital are assets for education and for health. It was from these that we received the small contributions and touching letters that told of a child’s life saved, of sight restored and the bitter period of the influenza epidemic made bearable by the woman physician’s bravery and skill.

There were many others, however, who were entirely ignorant of our work. If the Campaign has done nothing else, at least it has acquainted a part of this group with the story of the institution.

Our warmest endorsements came from the good friends who found time to attend the Campaign luncheons as speakers. Every address dwelt upon the tremendous future that awaits the College if this crucial year in its existence can be safely passed. They made friendly comments on the modest total which the Campaign Committee set as the goal for the present immediate effort. Full recognition was given the fact that not less than a million dollars will be needed to care for the contemplated developments.

The alumnae played an important part in the campaign, serving not only in executive capacities, but also as team captains and workers, collecting a great part of the money and giving generously as individuals.

At the outset of the drive the committee was especially fortunate in securing the coöperation of the Pennsylvania Committee of the National League for Woman’s Service, of which Mrs. Starr is chairman.

Mrs. Starr explained that during the influenza epidemic, when her work took her to the forlorn sections of the city, she recognized the woman physician as the one individual who stands between the layman and calamity when war calls men away.

She determined, then, that if ever opportunity to help women physicians presented itself, she would serve them to “the utmost limits of her strength.”

So generous was her pledge of service in the days of the campaign, that when the teams met on the final day of the intensive drive, Dr. Potter presented her with a golden caduceus, the emblem bearing on the reverse side Mrs. Starr’s initials and those of the College, together with the date of the Campaign and the word “gratitude.”

“We cannot give Mrs. Starr a degree,” Dr. Potter said: “we cannot make her a doctor; but we can decorate her, and this little token is as much a croix de guerre as those given on the field of battle. It is a token of gratitude, not only from the women physicians, but from the men, women and children of the city whom she has helped through them."

A fellow-member of the National League for Women's Service, Mrs. Knox Taylor, of High Bridge, N. J., added joy to the final dinner by verses in Mrs. Starr's honor. Space alone limits our quotation:

"Quoth Sarah, 'Here, this drive's too slow;
We'll help the woman medico.'

The doctors praise her near and far;
They've hitched their wagon to a Starr."

At the outset of the Campaign a goal of $5000 was set before each team as its quota, a division of obligation which proved especially satisfactory to the workers. Six teams worked for a professorship in Preventive Medicine in honor of Dr. Anna Howard Shaw; two teams were organized by the National League in Germantown, and a third came from the Central Headquarters of the National League at 1703 Walnut Street. Toward the end of the Campaign the Woman's Permanent Emergency Association of Germantown swung in a team which in a remarkably short time collected sufficient funds for a scholarship. The Barton team and three student teams did especially good work. The graduate council team of alumnae produced a tidy sum toward wiping out the College deficit; and if the detail of the Dean's office suffered a hiatus while Miss Bosworth's energies were directed far afield, the Dean made every effort to conceal the fact.

On January 7 headquarters were transferred to the Hotel Adelphia, and daily for ten days the workers met at luncheon to report progress and inspire each other to renewed effort. We extend to the hotel staff our sincere thanks for their daily coöperation.

A quick review of the Campaign, day by day, shows how the workers reached their goal by persistence, ingenuity of appeal, and the solid worth of their cause.

January 9. The first twenty-four hour report showed $16,187 subscribed. Dr. Ella B. Everitt's team led with $5235, which entitled her to the banner. Dr. Tallant's team won the pennant for the largest number of subscriptions.

January 10. Subscriptions amounting to $12,992 made the grand total of $28,783. Miss Margaret McK. Wilcox, reporting $5710 for her team, won the pennant.
Speakers: Mrs. Rudolph Blankenburg and Dr. Seneca Egbert, former dean of the Medico-Chirurgical College.

January 11 (Sunday). Drive for College carried into the churches.

January 12. Funds amounting to $15,295 raised grand total to $44,076.
Speakers at the luncheon: Rev. Dr. Floyd Tomkins, rector of Holy Trinity Church, and Mrs. Ellis A. Schnabel, president of the Associate Board of Management of the College Hospital.

January 13. Grand total raised to $55,059, and milk-bottle drive started on streets with slogan “Fill the baby’s bottle.”
Speakers: Miss Helen Taft, of Bryn Mawr College, and Director of Public Welfare, Ernest L. Tustin.

January 14. Donation of $10,000 reported by Dr. Tallant’s team; total for the day, $23,765; grand total, $78,835.
Speaker: Mr. David Berg, Chamber of Commerce.

January 15. Miss Bosworth’s team reported a gift of $5000 from Professor Harry Deaver, establishing a scholarship in memory of his mother. Day’s total, $14,963.64; grand total $93,805.
Speakers: Dr. Wilmer Krusen, former Director of Public Health, and Mrs. Josephine D. D. Bacon, the writer.

January 16. Contributions for day, $16,751; grand total, $110,555.
Speakers: Miss Gertrude Ely; Miss Elvira Plummer, of the Board of Managers of the Woman’s Hospital of Philadelphia.
Guests: Nine women physicians and two nurses, who had served overseas and attended the luncheon in uniform.

January 17. Day’s contributions, $9961; grand total, $120,249.
Speakers: Mrs. Henry Paxon, of the southeastern Pennsylvania Chapter, American Red Cross, and the Rev. Frederick Griffin, minister of the First Unitarian Church.

January 19. Amount reported, $12,567; making grand total, $132,822.
Speakers: Dr. Harriet L. Hartley, head of the Division of Child Hygiene of the City of Philadelphia; the Rev. Father Keough, chaplain of the Catholic students at the University of Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Lawrence Lewis Smith.

January 20. Campaign total announced as $169,822. Forty-one captains pledged to continue work until the goal is reached.
Speakers: Mrs. H. S. Prentiss Nichols, president of the New Century Club, and Tom Daly, the poet.
During those strenuous days of intensive effort cooperation from many directions was wonderfully stimulating. Through the personal interest of Mrs. Nixon-Nirdlinger slides announcing our work were thrown upon the screens in the moving picture theaters throughout the city.

The day by day publicity campaign in the newspapers, carried on for us by Miss Dorothy Bauer, was wonderfully productive of practical results, and through the efforts of Mrs. H. O. Peebles, of the Executive Committee, striking editorial comment favorable to our effort was secured. We take pleasure in expressing our heartiest appreciation of the support of the press.

Recognizing that much of the intensive effort would bear fruit during many succeeding weeks, it was agreed not to close the drive officially on January 20, but to continue working until March 11, on which date, the seventieth anniversary of the founding of the College, a final dinner might be held. The captains met together twice during this interval, reporting on both occasions a continuation of interest and additional funds coming in. In this interval, also, the National American Woman’s Suffrage Convention met in Chicago, and took action regarding the Shaw Memorial Foundation in Preventive Medicine, which is announced fully elsewhere in this issue. On the eve of our final dinner, on Founder’s Day, the sum of $201,000 was in hand.

At that final dinner, on the Roof Garden of the Adelphia, 270 guests were present, and Dr. Emily Waterman-Wyeth, probably the only member of the alumnae who has the distinction of being the twin of the College, celebrated her seventieth birthday with us that night.

Dr. Potter called for the last time the roll of the teams, and the fund crept up to a total of $211,696. The climax was reached when Mrs. John O. Miller, chairman of the Committee for the Anna Howard Shaw Memorial of the National American Woman’s Suffrage Association, announced that the Committee had determined to raise for this purpose $500,000, which sum will be apportioned between a Foundation in Politics at Bryn Mawr College and a Foundation in Preventive Medicine at the Woman’s Medical College of Pennsylvania.

Thus we went “over the top!” The rejoicing was delightfully expressed by the guests of the evening, each in his or her characteristic way. The speakers were: Mrs. John O. Miller, Mrs. Otis Skinner, Mr. Edward J. Cattell, Mrs. Benjamin Miller, Mrs. Wilfred Lewis, Dr. Frances C. Van Gasken and Dr. Martha Tracy.

Mrs. Starr, presiding at the end of the evening, delighted all with her ready wit, and finally in closing introduced Mrs. Ellis A. Schnabel, chairman of the Dinner Committee. Mrs. Schnabel on behalf of the Campaign Organization presented to Dr. Potter a handsome ring in token of appreciation of her leadership. Who will blame the leader, who has by her eloquent appeals done so much for the College, that at this overwhelming moment she had nothing to say?

Thus our Alma Mater has advanced a step further toward that much desired goal of financial independence.

With her extending circle of friends she will continue to grow and to extend even more widely her field of usefulness.

THE ANNA HOWARD SHAW MEMORIAL
OF THE
NATIONAL WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION

The Anna Howard Shaw Memorial Department of Preventive Medicine at the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania is assured.

During the intensive campaign over $30,000 was raised toward the endowment of the chair in this Department by a group of suffragists under the leadership of Miss Margaret McK. Wilcox, one of the members of the Associate Board of Managers of the College Hospital.

At the meeting of the annual convention of the National Woman Suffrage Association, held in Chicago, February 12 to 18, plans for a suitable memorial to Dr. Shaw were discussed.

A Foundation in Politics at Bryn Mawr College was proposed by Mrs. F. Louis Slade as a suitable memorial, while Dr. Ellen C. Potter presented as an alternative the establishment of a Department of Preventive Medicine at the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania. The vote of the convention was so evenly divided, with a small advantage on the side of Bryn Mawr, that upon reconsideration the following motion, presented by Mrs. John O. Miller, of Pennsylvania, was adopted:

"That the National American Woman Suffrage Association establish an official joint memorial to Dr. Anna Howard Shaw—at Bryn Mawr College a Foundation in Politics, and at the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania a Foundation in Preventive Medicine, as a fitting continuation of her life work; and that a committee be appointed to carry out the work by appealing to the women throughout the country, and that this committee be incorporated and assume the financial responsibility."

Mrs. Miller was appointed chairman of the Memorial Committee, and associated with her are Mrs. Rogers, Mrs. J. Claude Bedford, Mrs. F. Louis Slade, Mrs. James Starr, Jr., Miss Susan M. Kingsbury and Dr. Ellen C. Potter.

State committees are to be organized, and it is the intention of the National Committee to emphasize small contributions from large numbers of givers rather than large gifts from the few.

The National Committee has determined upon the sum of $500,000 as its goal. Unless gifts are designated they will be distributed equally between the two institutions.

Many of the alumnae who have not been able to take part in the recent intensive campaign can help to further the success of this enterprise by doing three things:
1. Contribute to the Anna Howard Shaw Memorial, sending your contribution to the Dean, who will forward it to the Treasurer of the Memorial Fund, as soon as the name is announced.

2. Express your willingness to promote this campaign by collecting for it in your own community, sending your name and address to Dr. Ellen C. Potter at 2101 North College Avenue, Philadelphia.

3. Send the names and addresses of active suffragists in your community to Dr. Potter, that she may seek their cooperation.

Your College is moving forward rapidly and is gaining recognition which will make your degree of greater value to you year by year.

Its continued progress depends in some degree upon your support.

Throughout our country men and women, graduates of the academic colleges and universities, are rallying to the support of their institutions in this hour of great need. Shall the graduates of this institution do less?
FOUNDERS' DAY

On March 11, 1850, by an act of the legislature of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, there was incorporated the Female Medical College of Pennsylvania.

On March 11, 1920, a notable gathering of students, alumnae and friends of the Woman's Medical College met to commemorate with appropriate ceremonies that historic event.

A simple program was arranged under the direction of a Faculty Committee with the hearty cooperation of the Students' Association.

Dean Tracy greeted the company assembled in the gymnasium and introduced as the Historian of the day Dr. Lillian Welsh, of Baltimore, a graduate of the College in the class of 1889.

Dr. Welsh spoke of Emily Blackwell's efforts to secure admission to a medical school in 1848, and suggested that her plea to members of the Faculty of the University of Pennsylvania may have had an influence here in Philadelphia in crystallizing into action the group of men who within two years of her visit founded this college.

The names of the pioneer women of the college history were recalled to us, and reminiscence of more recent decades brought smiles to the faces of many alumnae present.

Dr. Tracy followed Dr. Welsh with a brief survey of the problems confronting medical colleges at the present time, but pointing out the ever-widening field of opportunity before the young physician today.

The program was concluded by a pageant, "The Woman Physician," presented by the students.

An elderly "philosopher" was disclosed in conversation with a "skeptic" and a "scoffer," whose pessimism regarding world events was gradually changed to wonder and admiration as the noble deeds of woman, the physician, was spread before them. "Love," "Work," "Play" and the "Voice of Time" took part in this conversion of the Skeptic and the Scoffer, and both acknowledged their past ignorance and blindness before the curtain fell.

The tableaux introduced were beautifully conceived and executed, the velvet curtains parting at intervals to disclose the vivid pictures in a golden frame.

Hygeia, the goddess; the Woman Physician Unbinding the Feet of China; the Foreign Doctor surrounded by a group of adoring Orientals; Behind the Lines on a French Battlefield; the Well Babies' Clinic—were among the phases of woman's medical work depicted.

The lines accompanying the tableaux were written for the occasion by a member of the first-year class, and the entire presentation was executed by the students, whose dramatic ability was duly rewarded by the enthusiasm of the company.

After the curtain fell for the last time the guests lingered for a cup of tea and enjoyed the quaint effect produced by the presence of many costumes of seventy years ago.

A distinguished guest on this occasion was Dr. Winifred C. Cullis, Professor of Physiology of the Woman's Medical College of the University of London, who is lecturing at Vassar College as the first exchange professor of the newly organized International Federation of University Women.

Other guests, physicians from Baltimore and New York, expressed their interest and appreciation of the opportunity to take part in our exercises.

Our only regret was that every alumna could not have been with us in person, as we feel sure she was in spirit, on this historic occasion.

ADDRESS ON FOUNDERS' DAY

BY DR. MARTHA TRACY, DEAN

FRIENDS:

On the 11th of November, 1918, we awoke to the thrilling realization that an armistice had been signed and the world war was at an end. We rejoiced with an exceeding great joy that we might now cease from certain of the activities of the preceding year—the feverish manufacture of guns and of aéroplanes, the quiet, determined making of surgical dressings, and the other innumerable accompaniments of the tragic time through which we had been passing.

The struggle was over, the war was won, and the problems which had confronted us as a nation and as individuals confronted us no longer.

But almost at once, and in the eighteen months since that happy morning, we have realized with increasing force that the recovery from the state of war, the readjustments to a peace-time basis, present problems of even greater magnitude for solution than the problems of war.

As we have looked backward this afternoon with Dr. Welsh through the years in which the history of this College was making, I believe there is no one here who has not thrilled with admiration of the brave men and pioneer women who in the courage of their convictions and with steadfastness of purpose made possible the training of the woman physician.

I confess I have wondered whether I, in face of such obstacles as confronted them at every turn, should have had courage and faith to go steadily forward to meet day by day discouragement, prejudice, and open insult.

We are met today to rejoice that those men and women did remain steadfast, and that now after seventy years the institution which they founded stands, enlarged beyond their fondest dreams, a perpetual monument to their self-sacrificing devotion.

No longer is the public, led by the men of the medical profession, united in an effort to exclude women from this field of service, but instead we find a widening door of opportunity opening before us.

As it was on Armistice Day, so it is with us here, the woman physician can put behind her forever the dreadful necessity of preparation for conflict whenever she goes abroad into the scientific world.

I would not for a moment breathe in the minds of the enthusiastic undergraduate student any complacent feeling that she will never be favored with or chastened by a glimpse of that "hulking prejudice" which Charlotte Perkins Gilman has pictured in verse; but I can quite honestly assure her that, following Mrs. Gilman's suggestion, it is far simpler today to "walk right through that prejudice, as if he wasn't there”—and thousands of fellow-physicians, men and women, will stand by to cheer her while she does it.

Today, however, we face issues, difficulties, circumstances that must be met and conquered if this Institution, the bulwark of women’s opportunities in medicine, is to continue to fulfil the purpose of the founders.

A quotation from one of the speeches of Abraham Lincoln recently met my eye. "The dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate to the stormy present. The occasion is piled high with difficulties, and we must rise with the occasion as our case is new so we must think anew and act anew."

I find two points of view from which to look at the situation.

The Women’s Medical College of Pennsylvania must, first of all, stand shoulder to shoulder with her brother institutions in an effort to sustain the high standard which we have reached after years of endeavor.

With the sole purpose of service to suffering humanity, scientific men and women have labored to discover new means for the diagnosis and cure of disease—developing the so-called laboratory branches of medical science, a sound knowledge of this human body and its functioning might serve as foundation for the intelligent application of the technical methods desired to restore that normal functioning when it has become disturbed in disease.

Generation after generation of physicians has been conscientiously trained, the rapidly accumulated new knowledge added to or replacing the old, that the public might be benefited and human life saved.

In medical education, as in all college and university education, we are confronted now by the appalling lack of men and women ready to take up this sacred task of training the new generation—because forsooth it is not worth while to give to such teachers a living wage for their work.

At the recent conference on medical education in Chicago a message from the National Research Council was read, calling the attention of the physicians assembled to the already patent fact that medical science is tottering on its foundations—is confronted by the most serious crisis in its history—in this very grave shortage in the ranks of medical school teachers.

The answer, of course, is to be found in the acquainting of the public, fully and freely, with the dangerous conditions which will obtain should our schools from this time on discharge to practice upon the helpless sick generations of physicians ill-trained and poorly equipped, because there were no qualified teachers to train them.

The acquiring of adequate endowments which will make possible the payment of living salaries to the teaching staff is a problem which faces the trustees of this school, as of all schools, today, and the public must meet the challenge of this problem and solve it satisfactorily or be prepared for inefficient medical service before many years. We rejoice that you, our friends, have in our recent campaign shown your determination to stand by us in this crisis. We can meet and conquer it if we will. Aside from this problem which we share with all those concerned in medical education, the College, unique now as the only medical college for women in this country, is face to face with circumstances, with opportunities, with obligations that confront no other school.

For seventy years those who have had the policies of the College in their keeping have surely and steadily developed its facilities, extended the scope of its curriculum, added each new department which the progress of science proved to be necessary—until when medical colleges were classified by the American Medical Association the Institution took its deserved place in Class A.

Standards in medical education have been established and steadily increased, and as steadily we have each time conformed to the new standard set before us. Indeed, there have been epoch-making moments when this College has taken the first advance step in this city, and has then awaited until other schools should overtake it.

The training of practitioners of medicine has been the keynote of our service, and surely this is the duty and the chief duty of the medical school. The woman physician fulfils in the community a function which no other individual can fill. Though she practice the same scientific medicine which her brother practices, she does it in her way, not his, and therein contributes to the welfare of her patient something which he can never give. The man and the woman in medical practice, as in all other human relations, must supplement rather than duplicate each others work.

In addition today, and almost suddenly, under the influence of the war and the lessons we learned in its prosecution, we have become aware that the training of practitioners of medicine is not the only function of a medical school. That an equally great obligation is before us to prevent disease—to train those who may go forth as prophets of health rather than healing, claiming the privilege of guiding humanity into a knowledge of hygienic living which shall reduce the incidence of sickness, and thus make for a better and a happier humanity. And we conceive that the woman will find in this new vision of the medical school's obligation her opportunity to prepare for a service which she is exceptionally fitted to give by temperament and that mater instinct which is peculiarly her own.

The pioneer spirit of Ann Preston, of Emmeline Cleveland, and of Hannah Longshore, guiding our destinies, leads us to assert that this College need not always and in every particular limit its curriculum to that heretofore prescribed for medical schools. Lo, here is a new and worthy field of endeavor for us. Let us occupy it quickly and at once—that women and men may see that it is good, and in due time approve what may at first be viewed with apprehension.

Some one has said, "The Conservatives own this world, but the Radicals roll it along."

We have been conservative, steadily and solidly conservative, and upon that very conservatism our trustees have builded a strong and enduring structure. Let us now, in the name of Anna Howard Shaw, venture cheerfully upon a career of radicalism sufficient to roll our College along to an even greater usefulness than has yet been hers.

"One ship sails East, while one ship sails West, Though just the same gales blow;
It's the set of the sail, and not the gale,
That determines the way they go."

Though problems multiply before us, and the gale blows at times uncertainly, let us set our sail to the East, and with a firm grip on the tiller, and all hands alert and steadfast, let us sail toward the dawn of new obligations, of new opportunities and new achievements.
