tical and varied experience of several years' service in the Elmira and Clifton Sanitariums.

In 1866 she moved to Rochester, N. Y., being the second woman physician to practise in that city, and there for forty years she enjoyed a large practice and universal esteem.

She was married in 1880 to Rev. Austin Craig, D. D., president of the Christian Biblical Institute, near Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
Her husband lived but six months after their marriage, and Dr.
Craig resumed her residence and practice in Rochester.

Dr. Craig was a woman of rare individuality. She possessed a strength of mind and soul that inspired an instinctive trust, a good common-sense that is all too uncommon, and a warm and ready sympathy for all that were in distress of mind or body. Crowning all was her steadfast Christian faith which brought her into close touch with the Great Healer himself, so that He caused her to be greatly useful in restoring health and peace to many.

During her last illness, which extended over several months, Dr. Craig suffered much, especially for the last four weeks, but bore her suffering with that spirit of patience and resignation which had always distinguished her. She died on March 22, 1906, at the age of seventy-four years.

AMY AMES.

Dr. Amy Ames graduated at the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania. She practised medicine for a while in and near Camden; but her family soon met with financial reverses, and it became necessary for Dr. Ames to help largely and at once. She accepted a clerical position in St. Louis, where she remained until her health gave out in 1901, and in the summer of that year she died at the house of her brother in Atlantic City.

Dr. Ames was devoted to her parents, her sister and her children, practically supporting them. She was an unassuming, self-sacrificing character, and bore with great courage and no complaints many severe trials, not the least of which was the giving up the practice of her chosen profession.

MARY E. GALE.

After obtaining the degree of Doctor of Medicine at the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania, Dr. Gale served one year as interne in the Woman's Hospital of Philadelphia, and then went to Shanghai as a medical missionary under the Woman's Union Missionary Society. Having been refused a certificate of health, and the Board being consequently unwilling to send her, she paid her own expenses out, and received a salary from them as long as she was able to do medical work. After about ten years she gave up her position in the Margaret Williamson Hospital, but remained in Shanghai, where she had many warm friends among both missionaries and natives, and continued doing such missionary work as translating, teaching, and editing a paper for use in a school for Chinese girls. She became very much attached to the Chinese girls in the school, and one old Chinese Christian woman, who was first a servant, then a nurse, and always a most devoted friend, was her constant companion. This old woman, during the last week that Dr. Gale lived, was only able to sit quietly beside her bed.

Dr. Gale died April 7, after suffering long from heart-disease. One of her many friends among the missionaries wrote me, "She was laid to rest Sunday afternoon at five o'clock. That people loved her was shown by the attendance and by the flowers. She was more than covered by them. The Archdeacon, one of her best friends, had charge of the services, and it was all very simple, just what she would have liked. A number of Chinese Christians were there, so part of the services was in their language."

The same friend further adds: "I think she was one of the finest, if not the finest, characters I have ever known. I never expect to have another such friend, as a friendship such as hers comes only once in a lifetime. I am grateful for what it has been, and know that the whole world is the richer for her beautiful life."

Dr. Gale graduated from the training school of the Woman's Hospital, and in College was a member of the Class of 1886.

FRANCES LINTON SHARPLESS.

On Tuesday, May 15, 1906, Dr. Frances Linton Sharpless died at her home in West Chester, Pennsylvania, after an illness of about one month.

She was born in Montgomery County, on January 6, 1856, her parents being Charles and Hannah W. Linton. Her early education was received at the Friends' School at Abington, where she was prepared for Swarthmore College. She was graduated from Swarthmore in 1876, and took her second degree there in 1881.

For several years she was in charge of the Friends' School at West Chester, and later an instructor at Swarthmore College, but her strong inclination toward the medical profession led her to
